

Global Philanthropy

In 2007, in response to doing business in India, Caldwell worked with Free the Children to develop a charitable project to help children there. Below, Craig Kielburger, founder of Free the Children, accepts a donation for $250,000 to build the Caldwell Leadership Centre in India. The Centre is a catalyst to help Free the Children run programs for more than 5,000 North American children who will travel to India to create education facilities and programs for impoverished and marginalized children there. This school-building project will fulfill a great need for Indian communities and will provide indigenous children the chance for a brighter future. CIM was a sponsor of Free the Children's National Me to We Day which assembled more than 8,000 students at the Ricoh Centre, plus tens of thousands more who watched webcasts on mtv.com, for an education day with leading activists.

Craig Kielburger (centre right) accepts a $250,000 donation from Caldwell Directors, Dennis Freeman, Angela Stirpe, Tom Caldwell, Brendan Caldwell and Theo Caldwell.